Miss Lucy Tucker, the daughter of a prominent farmer of Versailles. Ind., was the victim of nervous prostration. Most of the time she was confined to bed, and was on the verge of St. Vitus' dance. It was a pitifal case which medical science failed to conquer. Finally a doctor prescribed Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. Her father said:

"We began giving the pills at once, and the next day we could see a change for the better in her. We gave her one pill after each meal until she was entirely well. She has not been sick a day since. We think the cure almost miraculous.

VIEWS OF A CABINET OFFICER.

Prompt Presidential Action Assured Should the American Commander at Manila Ask for Aid-Nothing Has Yet Justified a Call for Troops.

Washington, June 20.—"You may say that the slightest intimation from Gen. Otis that he wants more troops in addition to those he now has with him and those which are to be sent to him under the recent order, will be followed by a prompt call for volunteers. There will be no further par-leying with Aguinaldo and his followers, and no let-up in the aggressive campaign which Gen. Otis is conducting."

This was the pithy comment of one of the most influential members of the cabinet when informed that the entire nation, as evidenced by declarations of governors in response to requests for expressions of opinions, is practically united in its willingness to support President McKinley, should be deem the conditions in the Philippines necessitate a call for volunteers.

"It is the intention of the president," continued the cabinet official, "to use every means in his power to put down the rebellion in the Philippines as promptly as possible. Just before the president went away the question was frequently discussed at cabinet meetings, and there was no conflict of opinion as to the policy to be pursued in the Philippines. The president is determined to restore peace throughout the islands if it takes ten times as many troops as we now have there. Up to the present time there has not been a word or a suggestion from Gen. Otis and the ranking officers of his command indicating that the force there is insufficient.

"The president stands ready to call for as many volunteers as may be necessary to subdue the Filipinos, and there is every reason to believe that he can secure without delay all the volunteers he may call for.

"The official and unofficial reports of the engagements in the Philippines," continued the cabinet officer, "have agreed in the statement that in every encounter the American forces have been victorious. With victory upon victory reported from headquarters it was fair to assume that the enemy would eventually become weary of being thrashed, and finally recognize the power and determination of the American forces. Under the circumstances there has thus far been nothing to justify the president in calling for more troops."

Advocates of a larger army in the Philippines hope that the president will quickly take measures to raise the necessary troops. It is admitted that Gen. Otis cannot hope to do much more than hold his present lines during the rainy season, but it is urged that he ought to have enough men under his command to have his forces thoroughly reorganized and to be ready to begin aggressive action all along the line as soon as the rainy season closes.

It is believed by officials of the war department that it would be possible to enlist 35,000 men without taking much if any absolutely raw material. Certainly the regiments could be officered entirely by the pick of the officers who served as volunteers in the Spanish war, and it is believed that most of the enlisted men could be obtained from those who served in the volunteer regiments. Many of these men would be just as efficient as regulars, and it is argued that if they could be got together soon and put into camps of instruction until transportation could be provided they would be in condition to take the field at once on arriving at Manile.

Gen. Otis, it is acknowledged, would undoubtedly prefer to have his force made up as largely as possible of regulars. It would be possible for the war department to send him several more regiments of regular troops if their places in the United States and in Porto Rico could be taken by volun-

With more than double the force which he estimated he would need, officials here say he ought to be able to bring the campaign to a close in a comparatively short time and to occupy all the important points of the island with such strong garrisons as to make it apparent to the natives that the United States proposes to maintain order and put down rebellion with a strong hand.

To neglect to purify the blood at this time means more than the annoyance of painful boils and unsightly pimples. If these impurities are allowed to remain, the system succumbs to any ordinary illness, and is unable to withstand the many ailments which are so prevalent during spring and summer.

Mrs. L. Gentile, 2004 Second Avenue, Seattle, Wash., says: "I was afflicted for a long time with pimples, which were very annoying, as they disfigured my face fearfully.
